December President's Message

Friends,

On November 24 we had the third of our Jewish-Muslim dialogue series. Those of you who were there saw and participated in a fantastic program. Those of you who weren't there should seriously consider coming to the next program, tentatively scheduled for February 9th. The topic of this most recent program was maintaining cultural and religious identity in our assimilationist society. Many people told personal stories. I told some of my own history, of a non-religious upbringing, and how important my wife was (Thank you, Nina) to my Jewish connection. That was a recurring theme. It seems like many people's continuing involvement in Judaism is centered on their spouse.

A week earlier I had gone to a meeting for small synagogues in Herkimer, NY, sponsored by the United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism. I want to thank Howard Goldberg of the UCSJ for inviting me, and Bruce Nelson from Temple Beth Am for helping me stay alert on the drive. At that meeting there was a story-telling session at which, also, it seems that spouses and significant others carried a lot of weight in people's religious identification decisions. The yentas were right: "Marry a nice Jewish girl!"

This ties into a book I've been reading recently (yet another book report in the President's message). Relational Judaism by Ron Wolfson is very popular with synagogue leaders. It was recommended to me by several other synagogue Presidents. I don't recommend buying a copy, but it's worth borrowing. In a nutshell, it says that people's connection to Jewish institutions is based on their personal relationships with people in those institutions. There are elaborate schemes of greeters, lunches, coffee meetings, etc. used by various synagogues. Our own version of this is our Shabbat lunch, where people can sit and schmooze over good food after services. Here is where a guest to our shul can get to know us and we hope that will bring him or her back. I want to thank Janet Grable, who instituted the lunches during her presidency, as well as Steve Teitel and Aline Honickman and the crew of food preparers who have kept the lunches coming.

Another point made in the book is that you have to make your relationships where people are, not expect them to come to you. Here is an area we need to work on. You as individuals can talk about us to your Jewish friends, if the opportunity arises. As an institution, what can we do? Are people willing to host coffee klatches in their homes? Should I be meeting prospective members for a bagel at the JCC? Please send me your ideas.

I hope to see you all at the Chanukah party. With Chanukah ending this week, the next holiday isn't until Tu B'Shevat in mid January.

This past week, Myron Kolko, the beloved father of Rabbi Simeon Kolko, passed away. We extend our condolences to him and his family.

B'shalom,

Leon Metlay

WHY DO ISRAELIS CALL THE SECULAR NEW YEAR SYLVESTER?

The slang term for New Years (Dec 31-Jan 1) celebrations in Israel is "Sylvester". This term for New Year's night celebrations was the name of the "saint" and Roman Pope who reigned during the Council of Nicaea (325 C.E.). The year before the Council of Nicaea convened, Sylvester convinced Constantine to prohibit Jews from living in Jerusalem. At the Council of Nicaea, Sylvester arranged for the passage of a host of viciously anti-Semitic legislation. All Catholic "saints" are awarded a day on which Christians celebrate and pay tribute to that saint's memory. December 31 is Saint Sylvester Day - hence celebrations on the night of December 31 are dedicated to Sylvester's memory. But why do Israelis use the term? People who immigrated to Israel from western countries still wanted to celebrate the secular New Year like they did previously, but could not say that they were celebrating the New Year so they instead used the Catholic name of the day, Sylvester. That's why Jews in Israel refer to the event by the name of an anti-Semitic Catholic saint.

At the following Shabbat Services, we will read the names of our late loved ones whose Yahrzeits will occur on that Shabbat or during the following week.
